

Together for Families

Families play a key role in preventing and responding to substance use. Too many families are also grieving the death of a loved one due to substance use or coping with the stress that comes from loving a person affected by substance use or misuse. Fortunately, there are thousands of professionals and volunteers involved in all types of organizations who are in positions to help families help their loved one.

The Drug Enforcement Administration is honored to partner with these organizations at the state, national, and local level. Together for Families seeks to be a place where families can find information that helps them wherever they are on their journey.

Together for Families provides a directory of organizations that can help both families and community organizations that seek to serve families. These lists can be filtered by need and location. We are also proud to share “A Kind Word” – meaningful comments that families have heard on their journey that they wish to share. Together for Families is a work in progress. Over time, DEA seeks to broaden and deepen the resources that are offered on this site.

Today, please visit www.dea.gov/togetherforfamilies and click the link at the top of the page to sign up for e-mails and updates from Together for Families. On the signup form, please identify the state or states where you work so that DEA’s field divisions can also connect with you.

If you want to add an organization that you work with to the Together for Families network, or if you have any thoughts or recommendations, please e-mail togetherforfamilies@dea.gov

Thank you for being part of the start of Together for Families.
